In the Beginning

In the beginning was a dark and stormy nothing.
Perhaps it was a bit like a billowing black cloud that the wind tugs and tumbles.

Perhaps it was a bit like a dark and stormy sea
where the water swells and dips.

Into that nothing, God spoke:
"Let there be light."

God made the land and everything in it.

God made people to live in the world and take care of it.
“Everything I have made is for you to enjoy,” said God.
“But stay away from one tree. Its fruit will harm you.”

One day, Eve was by the fruit tree.

"Are you wondering?" asked a sneaky voice.

"Because I'm wondering too. I'm wondering why God said the fruit would harm you."

"I think it looks very good."

It was a snake speaking.

"I shall try some,"
said Eve.

"We're on our own now," said Adam. "We'll have to make the best of it."

"We'll find a way," said Eve. But she looked sad.

"I wish we could be friends with God again," she sighed.
